BOOK REVIEW

Entrepreneur-athlete’s lessons for success in business, life

BY JIM ALKON
Booktrib.com

There’s a passage in serial entrepreneur Steven Pivnik’s book “Built to Finish” where he is hiking up Mount Rainier and comes upon a sign, “No hiking past this point.”

“For me,” Pivnik writes, “that was an invitation to break the rules to see what lay beyond the warning sign.”

Later, about to compete in his first Olympic-distance triathlon, his wife surveys the treacherous, hilly terrain and tells her husband she doesn’t have a good feeling about this. “Even more fuel for my fire,” Pivnik responds.

Whether it’s closing multimillion-dollar licensing deals with IBM and Microsoft, to the Ironman World Championship, to ultramarathons and summit expeditions, Steven Pivnik knows how to go the distance – and sometimes that means stretching the envelope beyond what you think is even possible.

Like anything in life, “you never know what to expect when navigating a mountain. With each step comes a new risk.”

But in business, as in life, there’s such a thing as calculated risk – strategies and processes put in place to protect against such risk and increase the chances of a positive outcome, along with determination, discipline, resilience, patience, pace and the ability to get through “the grind,” the not-so-flashy but essential parts of any initiative.

Pivnik’s story is twofold. Raised from a Jewish upbringing and parents of limited means, he scratches and claws his way to create a thriving international information technology company with 200 employees and contracts from iconic industry trailblazers. After exiting the company, he turns his desire for new adventure into high-impact sports competitions, notably Ironman distance triathlons, marathons, ultramarathons, helicopter skiing and mountaineering.

In “Built to Finish,” Pivnik shares his story and the many lessons learned along the way. While the work is written as a narrative recounting his life story, the nature of his projects and accomplishments lend themselves to valuable nuggets on everything from the ABCs of running a business, to understanding and navigating the human element at every turn, to approaching each task and challenge with the proper mindset, to taking risks when appropriate, and staying the course when necessary.

While his wisdom comes anecdotally, he offers Key Takeaways at the end of each chapter, reinforcing the teaching points and the messages, such as:

- One mistake doesn’t define you.
- Sometimes it’s OK to wear success on your sleeves.
- Embed diversity and inclusion into your corporate culture as early as possible.
- Never underestimate the power of the personal touch to demonstrate your commitment.
- The magic happens in the trenches, so roll up your sleeves and pitch in.

For the next phase of Pivnik’s life, he looks to be a role model for his family, for the workforce at large, and for business leaders as he builds a platform of advisory services to other entrepreneurs.

The Rock, left, has been a menace to Cody Rhodes in recent weeks on WWE programming as well as social media. PROVIDED BY WWE.COM

WrestleMania

than 1,300 days.

Rhodes has his own familial history: His legendary father Dusty, who died in 2015, never won the WWE belt, and in a rematch Cody vies with Reigns for the title on Sunday and a chance to “finish the story.” But first Rhodes has to win the Saturday tag-team match, or else it’s “Bloodline rules,” which pretty much means shenanigans and chicanery are afoot.

Pro wrestling always has been best when it can weave elements of the real and fictional. Fans long wanted Rock to battle Reigns to see who is the real “tribal chief” of their extended Samoan family, which has deep, long-lasting roots in the wrestling community. (It even was teased in passing on an episode of Johnson’s former NBC biographical sitcom “Young Rock.”) That looked to be finally in the cards for Wrestle Mania this year, though at live events the crowds made it clear that Rhodes was their guy. Some nasty slaps, heated personal insults and one heel turn later, the Rock is now feuding with Rhodes and leaving him in a bloody mess in the rain on WWE programming, or dropping a curse-laden, 20-minute Instagram diatribe as if it were a surprise Beyoncé track.

Along with fellow grapplers-turned-actors Dave Bautista and John Cena, Johnson occasionally has returned to the WWE ring over the years. During last year’s actors’ strike, Cena came back for a spell to work with younger talent (including the Bloodline’s Solo Sikoa). Johnson usually is brought back as the electrifying “people’s champion,” since he doesn’t often play the heavy on the big screen. But this in-ring Rock variation is refreshing, because Johnson’s committed to tweaking a character we know and brilliantly changing his own game.

He first broke bad in the ’90s, after the babyface “Rocky Maivia” character failed and the Rock was born: a cocky, eyebrow-raising baddie everybody loved to hate (and eventually just plain ol’ loved). This current take on “Hollywood Rock” still has tons of charisma, but he’s dangerous and unpredictable. Johnson sang a strain from his “Moana” song “You’re Welcome” as a threatening overture toward Rhodes’ mom, and has even goofed on his dog. (So far, Rhodes’ wife and kid have been spared, but hey, it’s not showtime yet.)

More important, after the high-profile miss of his DC superhero movie “Black Adam,” Johnson’s showing how creative he can be. The family aspect ups the emotional stakes. Even as heels, you understand why Rock and Reigns fight for their people’s honor. At 51, Johnson naturally exudes more tough-guy gravitas than he did 25 years ago. And like any good actor, he’s making everybody around him better: This Rock has lifted up the popular Rhodes as even more of a beloved folk hero than he already was, made the flamboyant Rollins much more interesting and created a spicy “who will turn on whom first?” vibe alongside Reigns. Plus he just looks like he’s having a blast, even as crowds gleefully chant “Rocky sucks” once again.

Sadly, it might not last as long as we might like. Johnson will presumably be on good behavior when inducting his grandmother Lia Maivia into the WWE Hall of Fame Friday night. And even though he now sits on the board of directors at TKO (which owns WWE and UFC), at some point Hollywood will come calling again: While promoting the Christmas movie “Red One” later this year, Johnson probably won’t be telling a reporter to know their role and shut their mouth.

But Johnson knows his role right now, and is absolutely killing it. “Professional wrestling is cool,” he told the crowd Monday. And the Rock is cooking up a reminder of how great he can be for old-school fans, while taking newbies on a deliciously dastardly ride.

That takes the cake: Olivia Colman says she couldn’t believe “Wicked Little Letters” was based on a true story. “I was like, ‘Oh, my God, this is real?!’ ” PROVIDED BY PARISA TAGHIZADEH/ SONY PICTURES CLASSICS and I knew what it meant and it was never shocking. But now I’ve got kids, and I remember saying to them, “When you’re 18, the morning you wake up, you can say all the words you like! But until then, you’re not allowed to.” It just doesn’t sit nicely. In a kid’s mouth, swearing just makes me feel uncomfortable. But a naughty word can be so helpful sometimes. There can be a real power to it.

Letters

Sharrock: Particularly if you restrict it. You’re teaching them when it’s appropriate and when it’s not, and also to own it. You have to pick and choose when you use it.

What do you think is one of the funniest insults?

Colman: I remember one time, somebody was driving so aggressively on the motorway. My husband, Ed (Sinclair), could have been raging about it, but instead, he was like, “Oh, you silly sausage!” It made us all giggle.

Olivia, have you spoken to Emma Stone (Colman’s co-star in “The Favourite”) since her Oscar win?

Colman: Yes! I left a screaming voice message for her and she left a screaming message back for me, which was lovely. She was quite hoarse. It was so exciting.

Speaking of Oscar movies, Helen Mirren recently said that you filmed a “Barbie” cameo with her that wound up getting cut. What do you recall about shooting it?

Colman: It was really good fun! I was only there for a couple hours. And then when the film was due to be released, I had a call with David Heyman, the producer, who was just like, “I’m terribly sorry! The film was too long and it didn’t add to the story.” And he was right! It actually worked out brilliantly because I got paid for it and no one could say that I was bad in the film. So it was kind of perfect. But I didn’t get to meet Ryan (Gosling) and I was really cross about that.
